Having it's debut in Animal Crossing on the Gamecube, Nintendo 64 and DS, it's captured fans hearts and has been in every game since. Appearing apart of the froggy set paired with the Lily-pad table it's been the centre of attention as of late. With the Direct being played on february 20th, both frog emotes and the words "froggy chair" were being sent repeatedly in chat. As fans awaited the chair's reveal in the direct which didn't happen so now fans are finding more to wait for in it's release on the 20th of march a month after the direct.

While it may be a little hard for someone unfamiliar with the series to understand what all the hype is about. But the chair perfectly encapsulates what Animal Crossing is about, where it's normal and fun to just wander around shooting balloons with slingshots or find dancing clay figures called Gyroids. Finding emotion and happiness in the most mundane of objects is apart of what can make it so easy to just switch on a game of Animal Crossing and just wind down, be it becoming the mayor of your town, visiting a friends town or just building a snowman. We here at CO-OP all eagerly await the release of the new game and can't wait to have our own islands.

Animal Crossing launches March 20th of this year

We believe games can bring people together, so why not jump into it?

and join us at CO-OP

CO-OP

We are CO-OP, a news platform dedicated to the documentation of games and spreading the joy that games can bring. Be it sitting down with the family to play a few rounds of Monopoly to bringing all your friends over to play Smash Bros all night long. We see these experiences as ways to build bonds and establish connections. So why not invite over a few friends of yours, maybe make some popcorn and pop in a game, have fun and enjoy yourselves cause that's what we believe games can do. Bring people together without words.
